News from the Archdiocese of Hartford · January 11 - 17, 2025

CONNECTICUT CATHOLIC CONFERENCE LAYS OUT PLAN AHEAD OF 2025 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

With the Connecticut Legislature getting underway for the new session, Chris Healy, executive director of the Connecticut Catholic Public Affairs Conference, is preparing for several challenges that include protecting the sanctity of life, the right to freely practice religious faith amid growing antisemitism, school choice options and social justice issues.

The session officially started Jan. 8 and ends June 4. In the coming weeks, the Conference is anticipating some lawmakers may submit bills that threaten the Catholic faith.

Chris Healy speaks at the 2024 March for Life

"We must prepare for proposals that further abortion practices, that legalize assisted suicide, further harass pregnancy care centers and assault the religious directives Catholic hospitals operate under," Healy says. "The proponents of these initiatives are supported by national organizations that are not reflective of Connecticut voters."

The Conference is the public policy and advocacy office of the Catholic bishops in Connecticut which supports or opposes legislation. Its mission is to work with elected officials at the state and federal levels to influence public policy and stand with other faith groups to promote and ensure a better life for all.

At the top of the Conference's agenda is the issue of biological males participating in girls' sports and laws regarding transgender surgeries of children.

The Conference advocates Title IX protection of young women the right "to participate in the same scholastic sports as males by prohibiting discrimination based on sex in education programs and activities," Healy says.

In recent years, the definition was expanded to include transgender males. "This created an unfair reality that bolstered men competing in women's sports at all competitive levels with the full protection of the federal government," he says.

Another issue of concern, he adds, is school choice which would give parents "the freedom to guide their children's future while allowing public funds to follow the child."

"We will be trying to get something on the books in Connecticut that will allow for people to support school choice financially and get some kind of tax benefit, which will allow more kids to go not only to Catholic schools, but any other school that fits their needs," Healy says. "We need to help them pursue their dreams, especially if they're in a failing school district or they're restricted by their zip code from getting a decent education."

Religious freedom, which is guaranteed under the Constitution, has faced growing challenges in recent months with acts of antisemitism on college campuses and in the public arena, the executive director says, adding the Conference will work to bring greater public awareness to the problem.

The beginning of a legislative session usually brings a new Connecticut General Assembly based on changes of elected legislators in the 2024 election, Healy says. "There's always the unknown, but we know what we have to do. We have to get Catholics and others who share our views engaged so their voices are heard. If we organize and do that and follow God's blessing, we'll be fine."

In the past, the Conference has partnered with other faith groups to support issues of faith.

"They share our values on these issues and they appreciate the fact that the Catholic Church has asked them for their help and that we help them as well when we can," Healy says. "They helped us in opposing assisted suicide, and hopefully we can do that again this year on other issues."

Healy urges people to get involved with their local elected state legislators to oppose any proposals that come before the Legislature that threaten Catholic teachings. For more information about the Connecticut Catholic Public Affairs Conference, visit etcatholicpac.org.

Dear Parish Community,

I am writing to issue a retraction regarding a recent error in our Bulletin Memorial Pages. It was mistakenly noted that Kathleen Camire had passed away. I deeply apologize for this mistake and any distress it caused. Kathleen Camire is very much alive, and we regret the error. Names were added to the Bulletin Memorial incorrectly due to a misread. We will take the corrective steps so that this does not occur in the future. We appreciate your understanding and apologize for any confusion.

*Sacred Heart of Jesus, have mercy on them. Immaculate Heart of Mary, pray for them.
St. Joseph, friend of the Sacred Heart, pray for them.*
